Xining is the capital city of Qinghai province in western China and the largest city on the Tibetan plateau. It has a population of 1.6 million.

The Wutun People

The Chinese government does not recognize the Wutun as a separate people group but includes them under the Tu nationality. The Wutun resist this classification and insist on their own status.

Tibetan Buddhism is the only religion among the Wutun. They are fanatical believers. Their whole ethnic identity is bound up in their religion. Although they do not have their own temples, the Wutun frequent Tibetan temples in the Tongren area. Like all Buddhists, the Wutun believe they will end up in a state of bliss after death. But being better and more privileged, they believe they will go there directly, while other Buddhists achieve enlightenment only after going through many trials and testing's.

Many of the Wutun are skilled artists. Buddhist scenes and the Buddha himself are the most common subjects of their paintings. They claim their artistic skills came about because the original soldiers studied art in Nepal.

The Wutun have an almost complete lack of knowledge about the existence of Christianity.
